THIS WEEK'S FEATURED TOPICS:

ARE YOU A VIRTUAL ASSHOLE?

Ok, that title probably made you sit up and take notice. Relax though, this is not going to be a big rant.

The sick, twisted people from TRF(WTF?) were sitting around last weekend trying to find something interesting to talk about and the topic of "civility" came up. It provoked many ideas and much commentary, some of which we would like to share with you, our TRF friends and family.

People always speak of the "good old days" like they were actually good or something. To this we say "nay, nay!". The past always looks better than the present for the same reason the grass is always greener on the other side of the fence. It's because you are denied access to either one. And you know, a thing denied is a thing coveted. The same could be argued about civility and "good manners". Some say that people were more polite in the 'good old days', but were they really? Or did they just exhibit cultural norms that no longer exist and are thus now desirable as a result? Maybe it is just the demented hallucinations of those old enough to remember. Whatever.

Then somebody said "internet" and "RenFaire blogs" and it all started to make sense. Maybe the reason that people are becoming less civil to each other is because they are getting lots of practice being assholes on the internet. With an anonymity only possible from hiding behind a keyboard and a "nickname", a person can hurtfully snipe at others while thinking there will be no consequences. Usually there aren't, which is what feeds this problem. And it's true that internet altercations rarely spill out into real life. But when they do, and the aggressor is confronted face to face, even the toughest-sounding ones turn into whimpering cowards because inside, that is all they really are. It's easy to be an asshole in virtual reality. We think some people need to either learn to leave it there, or just live there full time and spare us their immaturity. The world would be a much happier place.

DELAYED REPORT OF MORE ALL HALLOW'S EVE SHENANIGANS

Note: This report is from the trfwtf@yahoo.com mailbox. It was worded so well that we are printing it almost exactly as received:

"A drink vendor was spotted in the lanes outside the Sea Devil running into Hagrid with his cart. Maybe it's just me, but a 7 foot tall 4 foot wide half giant seems pretty difficult to miss. When Hagrid almost fell & became alarmed, said drink vendor was heard saying, "I'M TRYING TO WORK HERE" without stopping to see if Hagrid was okay or had fallen in those 7 inch tall boots. Okay, so maybe the vendor missed the performers medallion indicating Hagrid was working too, but one would think running over a patron would be particularly bad form.

"A patron from Louisiana brought her pregnant sister to wine tasting on Sunday at 3:00. After downing all of her drinks, she polished off her sister's drinks too. Then she flitted off to the privies after accosting 2 of the other patrons attending the tasting. She was signed up for the mead tasting at 5:00 but never made it back from the privies. The Tavern de Vino crew had to send the watch for the greedy lush, and her hubby had to leave the mead tasting to locate [her]."

AMAZINGLY STUPID PATRON STATEMENT OF THE WEEK

"I'm going to hurt my wife tonight because of you."

- Spoken by some ugly son of a bitch at the Sea Devil to a courtesan eating a chocolate dipped banana

WHO DIDN'T GET THEIR COPY OF TRF(WTF?) LAST WEEKEND?

We have been hearing numerous and horrifying tales of faire participants that have been unable to find copies of this fine publication in the "usual locations". We hang our heads in shame at the limited print runs, but these damned things aren't cheap to produce.

But fear not! Lo, your hard-working friends here at TRF(WTF?) are in the process of creating a way to feed your addiction online! In the next few weeks, all current and archived issues of this newsletter will be made available on the internet. Stay tuned for more stunning developments, coming next week!
