THIS WEEK'S FEATURED TOPICS:

Water Under the Bridge (or, Fools! You Just Couldn't Stay Away, Could You?)

Let's see, this time last year had a large part of Houston digging out from under the ruckus left by Hurricane Ike. There were a lot of unknown and unsung heroes created during that little chapter and you know who you are, so we will just do a shout out to all of you, all at once. Not everybody in this town sucks, it seems.

But wait! That's not all! Even as the wind was dying down and TRF was winding down too, the financial house of cards built by the most unholy and unwashed collection of greedy assholes the world has ever known, started to fall over. Well thank you very much, you politicians, bureaucrats, banking executives and other stiff pricks. Anything else? Maybe another war? Oh, wow. Looks like that may be on the agenda too (hello Afghanistan!). We can only hope that somebody in Washington will grow a brain, but personally, we're not going to wait up for it.

But enough of the negative waves. Your friends at TRF(WTF?) sincerely hope that everyone is ready to power up and recreate the insanity and art of the Texas Renaissance Festival for one more year. There are so many new ideas and projects rolling out this year, who could possibly be blasé about this place? Party on!

And hey, you guys be careful out there!

More Off-Season Rumors About "King" George

There have been persistent, but unverifiable rumors that our fearless leader, George, had some kind of "clinical episode" over the summer and had to be committed to the Fletcher Memorial Home for Incurable Tyrants and Kings. He has since been sighted on the grounds, so it would appear that news of his retirement has been greatly exaggerated.

Damn.

Your humble servants at TRF(WTF?) are feverishly trying to run down the source of these rude but believable rumors, so if anything worth repeating is found, you will hear it here first.

Say Hello to Our New Sponsor!

You may have noticed by now that PEPSI is liberally splashed (figuratively speaking) all over much of Texas Renaissance Festival propaganda. Well, what a crazy coincidence! Here at your favorite underground newsletter, we have a new sponsor too!

Yes, it's that runaway libation sensation of the Medieval World, Scarlet Heifer® Speed Mead™ Energy Drink! That's right! All that honey-made goodness now has an artificial kick! Get some at your local pub, today!

Just Because It's Texas
Doesn't Mean It's the 'Tater Salad 500'

TRF(WTF?) doesn't spend much time pounding on people unless they are being really, really stupid. In this case, the focus is on the individual that was racing around the site on dress-rehearsal weekend at high speed, bouncing between all the little trinkets huts. You know who you are. Hey Mario Andretti, there's a reason for the speed limit on site. It's supposed to be a clue that running over somebody is not in your best interest. Whatever emergency situation you apparently created for yourself did not give you the right and privilege to put other people at risk. Here's a friendly hint: Slow your speedy ass down. Your potential victims thank you.

We Are Crying on the Inside. Really.

Our heartfelt condolences go out to all of the vendors that waited until the last possible weekend to finally show up to get their shop buildings built, rebuilt, or otherwise taken off the condemned structures list. In case you missed it, this is Texas in late summer and it RAINS here this time of year. On a related note, we hope all of the noobins on Welfare Way built their pallet-and-plywood platforms above the high tide line.

See you next week!
