THIS WEEK'S FEATURED TOPICS:

Entertaining Patron Shenanigans

The shenanigans were few and far between last weekend due to the rain and abundance of cheapskates on the grounds admitted via complimentary passes. However, some entertainment did pop up. Among the lost kids and locked cars on Saturday was an urgent call for paramedics to the Executioner's stand. Our first gleeful thoughts were dashed when a follow-up call stated that a man had simply fallen over and injured his foot or something. With the amount of beer that flowed into the patrons from the unquenchable taps of the various pubs on site, such an eventuality was not surprising. Alas, the EMS response was ultimately rendered unnecessary since the unstable man managed to get up and "hobble away" (exact quote) before medical help arrived.

On Sunday, several people reportedly had to be treated for ocular injuries after pouring bleach into their eyes. It seems they got a painful glimpse of a fully grown adult yellow TeleTubby (yes, an honest to limey TeleTubby) that was roaming our formerly TeleTubby-free faire. In the history of other-worldly lifeforms that show up at TRF, this needs some kind of minor award. Check it out in the Images You Can't Un-See column to the right. Have some bleach handy, just in case.

First Weekend Freeloaders

Is it just us, or has anyone else noticed that the only really successful merchants on first weekend were the pubs, the purple poncho pushers and the Approved Paraphernalia Shoppe? We here at TRF(WTF?) realize that most mundane patrons can't wait to use that complimentary pass to TRF, but despite the rain, couldn't they at least have visited one of the ATMs for some cash to drop on the soggy vendors and entertainers last weekend? Of course with the bloated Tony Soprano fees charged by the crooks that run the damned ATMs in this place, maybe it isn't all that surprising they didn't. We have an idea: Maybe TRF management could give the shoppe owners a break on the parasitic vendor fee on the weekends when attendance sucks. After all, they're not really getting their money's worth if nobody shows up. They could also charge an exit fee at the gate and divide that up among the entertainers. Hey, why not?

Images You Can't Un-See

This could have been captioned "Beauty and the Beast", but fails on one point.

Parade testing the newest Entertainment Company character, "Buggery Bear". Just don't touch the stick.

Yes, it's a TeleTubby.

We are speechless.
Completely speechless.

News from Growler Grove
(Aka: Why You Shouldn't Be a Complete Ass to Complete Strangers, Revisited)

Cue some attitude... Okay, so this week's display of extreme douchebaggery didn't even really come from Growler Grove. It came from a shoppe in the inner circle's bastard offspring, the circle west of Welfare Way. Look, we actually really like this shoppe and the woman who works there, so we're not going to point fingers just yet. Simply consider this a friendly warning to all of you shoppe owners: some of your best customers are participants at this festival, AND they might be undercover investigators from the original TRF underground newsletter. We have to give the owner in question credit for the fact that she at least did her hiring well. Although she rather thoroughly demonstrated herself to be socially inept, she managed to get someone who isn't part reptile to run the shoppe. Not-so-subtle hint: Trying to be runner-up to Queen Bitch of the Universe is an express lane drive to our shit list, and that's a really scary place. People actually read this newsletter and may decide not to patronize your business. Hmmm?

Oh, and by the way, what's with the shoppe with the imported dog costumes? We've seen bizarre and useless stuff being sold here, but DOG COSTUMES? Patrons can be excused for bad taste, which may be good for this shoppe since it is unlikely there is a TRF participant on either side of Loch Mess that would shop there. On a peripheral note, is it historically accurate to dress your pet like a jester?

While We Are Bitching and Moaning...

We know parking is hard to find on a site the size of TRF, but there is really no reason to block other people in just because you are in a hurry or have a psychopathic need to be an asshole. Incidentally, there are certain faire participants that stand ready to change the color of the next car that blocks them in. Remember, you heard it here first.

TRF(WTF?) Reader Poll

If King George Had $10,000.00 that he HAD to spend on creating a better workplace for the participants, should he:

- A: Fix the hot water to the participant showers?
- B: Lime the participant parking areas so they don't turn into orange pudding when it rains?
- C: Pave the roads in the backstage area so our cars don't vibrate apart?
- D: Expand the backstage areas so we're not parked on top of one another?
- E: Provide adequate nighttime lighting around the exit and parking areas so that it's not as easy to rob/assault/kill people at TRF?

Your vote matters to us! Write to TRFWTF@yahoo.com and let us know what you think! (Note to the reader: We said your vote matters to us. This poll has no actual weight in convincing George to grow a soul or a bleeding heart and consider the health and safety of the people who make this festival happen).
